This survey will be used for data collection for a research project conducted by a group of undergraduate students in the Family, Youth and Community Sciences department under the supervision of Drs. Kelly Moore and Candice Stefanou. The purpose of this research is to explore how various high impact practices affect an individual's self-esteem, self-efficacy, motivation, and intention to make a difference. High impact practices include participation in activities such as internship/practicum, undergraduate research, study abroad, service-learning, and volunteering during college.
